Dangerous Climbing

A 14-year-old boy was rescued on Saturday when he climbed up some cliffs at Dover to look at birds and got stuck 40 feet up.

The boy, Alan Weir, was one of the students who was coming to Dover on an outing organised by a youth club. Alan looked up the cliffs and saw some nesting birds. He decided to climb up and have a closer look at them, because he wanted to see if there were chicks or eggs in the nest.

The first part of the climb was easy but after a bit it became more difficult and finally Alan found that he could not get any higher. He also realised he could not climb down again. His feet kept on slipping on the sandstone and he was very scared. People saw that he was in trouble and called for help.

The rescue team had been alerted and firemen arrived soon. They parked their car on the grassy clifftop, a few feet from the edge. They attached one end of a rope to the car and then they lowered Alan to safety with the rope. The whole incident lasted about twenty minutes and was watched by hundreds of holidaymakers.

After being rescued, Alan said, "I like climbing but I do not think I will climb anything made of soft sandstone again."
